Norwood, of Georgia: In the United States Senate, February 17 and 27, 1875 The Senate having under consideration the resolution to admit P. B. S. Pinchback as Senator from Louisiana - Mr. Norwood said: Mr President: When the fox, weary from the chase, begins to trail his brush and hears the deep-mouthed bay of the pack and the shout of the hunters pressing hard upon him, his instinct teaches him to double on his track in order to elude the hot pursuit. When the politician finds himself pursued by an indignant people he, too, from instinct turns in his path - endeavors to cover up his tracks and reach his point of departure. Sir John Falstaf was pregant and quick with this high moral virtue. He was a model politician He knew the true prince from instinct. His modern lineal descendants reflect no shade of dishonor on the valorous instincts of their great progenitor. There is a story told of an animal whose depredations upon the beasts of the forest...
